Chapter I
INTRODUCTION

“Soft Skill is utterly important for every individual to sustain and grow in any work place and in life”

Soft Skills is a term used in the industry to denote a person's EQ (Emotional Quotient) rather than his technical or professional skills.

They are skills relating to one's personal attributes and soft skill encompasses of others, personal, communication, social and self-management behaviours. They cover a wide spectrum of personal traits and abilities including but not restricted to being reliable, trustworthiness, adaptability, personal integrity, leadership, social grace, time management, awareness, likeability, attitude, team building, influencing skills, etc. It talks about how a person reacts and interacts in the work place, and in life and how effectively he deals with his managers, co-workers, subordinates and others in general.

1.1 Importance of Soft skills
